Jared, how were you left feeling after this whole experience?

how did you feel after you'd made the film@

Was there any footage you couldn't use but wanted to?

What do you propose moving forward? (Rob) And how can I help you?

How has the exposure the film at COP26 had, going to influence the future progress?

What influence do women in the Sahel have given the strength of Islam and violent groups?

Was it difficult to obtain perspectives from the locals and those who had real experience from these issues ?

Can businesses donate their "offsetting" budgets to this project?

I did not expect anything less from you. I'm in awe...thank you! How much of the film has unveiled itself to you during the process of filming and how much of Inna's emotions and interactions directed your final editing?

Have you got any questions?

are the local warlords resisting this project?

The statistics about Lake Chad were shocking to see - do you know if there are projects working to restore it as well?

The enormity of the challenge and the importance of story and song to inspire, motivate and get across difficult messages. Thank you - wonderful

What have you taken away from tonight?

it starts with change of mind - believe a sense of how deeply interconnected the social and environmental aspect are growing the soil lets everything else grow

Only action makes a difference...within the climate crisis

To be open about small changes which could potentially create large benefits

What have you taken away from tonight?

Absolutely amazing - thank you Gwyn for inviting me, and Jared for sharing. So insightful but with such heart-rending moments. You did make me cry but it lifted me up too.

Just how precious and potentially life changing water is deep appreciation to Jared for making the film and drawing so much attention to this project

Active hope is that unstuck place
